

Have you ever wondered what an Honors Program is like in college? Looking for a small academic community within a large University? Join us to find out how the Honors Program can enhance your experience at the University of Washington!

University of Washington Honors Program
Admission Information Night
Wednesday, November 5th 6:00-8:00 PM
UW Seattle campus, Kane Hall Room 110

The UW Honors Admission Information Night is designed to give you specific insight into the Honors Program community and application process. We hope to inform potential students about how an Honors education can enhance the UW experience and answer all of your questions.

The University Honors Program integrates challenging courses and diverse learning experiences for academically motivated students in a close community of faculty, staff, and peers. The core curriculum offers a broad liberal education, while departmental honors programs provide a deep disciplinary education. The program asks students to take intellectual risks; to seek an understanding of the interdependence of all branches of knowledge; to take leadership roles in confronting global change; to see the complexities of race, ethnicity, class, gender, sexual orientation, and nationality; and to value a life of continuous learning and personal growth.

At this event, you will have an opportunity to:

- Meet Honors students, faculty, and staff
- Get an overview of the Honors Program with perspectives from Honors Director and Classics professor James Clauss, Honors advisers, and a panel of current Honors students from a multitude of disciplines
- Walk through the Honors Program admissions process and time line;
- Learn about a variety of student community and study abroad opportunities;
- Ask all your questions about what it's like to be a UW Honors student.

To register for the limited spaces available for this event, please go to:
<http://depts.washington.edu/uwhonors/news/brief/?id=7>

RSVP by October 31.

Sincerely,

The UW Honors Staff
