Life Lessons for Athletes – Redefining the Term Athlete

Presenter: Tim Driver of Proactive Coaching

Everyone who belongs to a team - be it athletic, business, social, or even a family, should accumulate a set of life lessons including core values. These values drive our success in anything we strive to achieve. Living those values over a lifetime allows us to leave an integrity footprint on those we come in contact with, influencing them for the better. This presentation will not only outline the life lessons one should attain from being part of a team, but also how to apply these values to everyday decision making including combating the challenges and temptations that come our way.

Tim Driver works alongside Bruce Brown & his Proactive Coaching organization. They are nationally known for their presentations on character development in sports traveling across the country training coaches, sports captains, business leaders, parents and athletes in professional, college and youth sports. Tim Driver has worked in the field of education for over 20 years. He has taught at the junior high, high school, and college levels, and has been a high school coach for 24 years in three different sports. His humor and vast experiences make him an outstanding presenter.
